Console, modding and multiplayer are not items to be pushed as DLC This is unacceptable, especially for a game like this.. For those who do not know, the GPS game is supposed to be a geopolitical simulator where you assume the position of president of a country and your main objective is to remain in power.. A great idea, but a terrible execution Not only Eversim does not give a lot of effort researching how most countries work (in other words, only a handful countries are truly represented in the game) or creating an AI to play with you (so, you will be playing in a vast and empty world), but the game is still plagued with bugs (small or game breaking, from old games or new ones; they are all there).. This game is not worth its price and the DLCs, that should be part of the main game, will only make it more expensive.. On top of that, Eversim insists into the same commercial business Weak communication with the community and close to no attention to the fans.. For those who do not know, the GPS game is supposed to be a geopolitical simulator where you assume the position of president of a country and your main objective is to remain in power.. Ok, a new Geopolitical Simulator game is out and the old question remains: is it worth the price? The answer, unfortunately, is “no”.. Missing They are also keeping their DLC policy After the main game (which is already unjustifiably expensive), the announced paid DLCs are: - God N Spy: basically, access to console commands that you will mostly use to fix bugged numbers; - Modding Tool: the ability to mod the game; - Multiplayer: the ability to play with other people.. Once you get in power (from any of these 3 routes) you objective is to remain there or it is game over.. Ok, a new Geopolitical Simulator game is out and the old question remains: is it worth the price? The answer, unfortunately, is “no”. ae05505a44 Libreoffice Hardware Acceleration
